

United Effort Urged To Keep Sealanes Open

OTTAWA, June 11.—(CP)—The "moral danger" to Britain's sealanes was the subject of a speech by the prime minister, Mr. MacDonald, last night in a broadcast address.

Speaking over the national network of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, the former minister of shipping and of economic warfare urged the "utmost" in shipbuilding effort, particularly by the United States, to overcome the deficiency being created in Britain's shipping by Axis sea raiders. Mr. MacDonald is on his way to Australia.

"Picture . . . what it means to have ships sunk faster than you can replace them," he said. "Imagine the effort that we are making at home and the effort that we require within the British commonwealth and above all from our good friends in the U.S. to cope with this mortal danger."

"I speak with full knowledge of all the facts when I say that this threat can be met and can be overcome, but it needs the United effort of all free peoples. Overcome this threat, maintain supremacy at sea, and victory sooner or later is sure."

Those who knew the "urgent sense of the position," he said, would put their utmost into producing ships and more ships at a speed that would constitute an all-time record.

"Make good the bridge across the Atlantic; make good the ocean shipping routes," he concluded.

"British soldiers, sailors and airmen from the four corners of the earth will sink it until they have in their hands the weapons which as sure as day fellows might will finish the job."

Axis Armament Output To Be Exceeded Soon

SENIORITY CLUB, Que. June 11.—(CP)—A high official of the United States office of production management said Tuesday the United States and Great Britain could exceed the armament output of the Axis nations "before very long."

John D. Biggers, director of the O.P.M. production division, made the statement in a speech before the Canadian Manufacturers Association and related that the United States had enlarged its armament program almost 10 times in the last year.

SPENDING HUGE SUMS

"Even this winter we did not believe we could spend more than $6,000,000,000 on armaments during the fiscal year ending this month," he said. "Happily this figure will be exceeded."

"Some time ago we planned to spend $17,000,000,000 during the fiscal year and $22,000,000,000 during the following 12 months. Even if we pay out only $17,000,000,000 during the coming fiscal year, this figure added to Britain's $10,000,000,000 and additional $4,000,000,000 from the Empire, we get a total of $31,000,000,000 worth of war equipment produced to keep on Axis. This might possibly exceed the war effort, in terms of industrial production, by Germany, Italy and Japan."

AHEAD OF SCHEDULE

"And we are still raising our sights in the conviction that we can, before very long, arrive at an overwhelming superiority over Axis production."

Biggers asserted that "almost every ship now building is rapidly expending yards in excess of schedule at the present time," he added.

"North America—Canada and the United States are fully embarked on a gigantic effort with one purpose—to win the war as quickly as possible and thereby remove forever the possibility of war reaching our own shores. . . . We are determined that, come what may, the products of the rapidly-growing arsenal of munitions shall be delivered to the active fighters for democracy in England."

Italian War Prisoners Are Dire Problem

he able to arrange for Mussolini's cooperation through the Vatican, the International Red Cross, but many quarters in Cairo think it is an ideal solution.

There is no fight left in Italian war prisoners, it is said, and their return to Italy will see the Italian civilians would confront Fascism with 200,000 propagandists for a separate peace—propagandists who could not be silenced and who would be lured to in every village square. Mussolini's refusal to accept them would be difficult to keep secret, moreover.

The British have the goodwill of these prisoners because they have been treated well, and their officers even paid salaries. The only group discriminated against are officers of the Fascist black-shirt militia. They are not treated as army officers but must dig ditches and work like common foot soldiers. This in itself has aroused enthusiasm among the Italian regular officers who long suffered at the hands of these politically-minded Fascist amateurs.

Fifth column activity in Egypt becomes a serious possibility now that German bombers fly from Crete which is only 330 miles away. Two hundred persons have been killed in a single raid on Alexandria already. Courage is not a conspicuous Egyptian quality and that country's continued neutrality, like that of Ireland, is due primarily to fear of bombings. The Egyptians might not under steady bombing and that would facilitate fifth column activities.

POSITION BETTER

Your correspondent wrote nine months ago that the then Italian Commander-in-chief in North Africa, Marshal Rodolfo Graziani, would never take Egypt except by fifth column activity. Given an improved in Britain's armament position and in the training of its troops British middle eastern commander Gen. Sir Archibald Wavell's position in face of Nazi North African commander, Lt.-Gen. Erwin Rommel, is better than it was in face of Graziani.

Necessary Tools Must Be Secured

SENIORITY CLUB, Que. June 11.—(CP)—Thomas Arnold, machine tools controller in the department of munitions and supply, warned Canadian manufacturers Tuesday that he would not hesitate to take looks from non-essential industries if they could serve the war effort better elsewhere.

"When I want tools for war in quantities I know where to get them," he told members of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association gathered here in annual convention.

"When I want them I'm going to go out and take them. This is not going to ask for them. This is a warning. I have been too lenient in the past. Housewives will have to wait a couple of years for some of the things they want and those who want pleasure goods will have to wait maybe a year longer."

Urging manufacturers not to be afraid "to take on any war contracts," he said the government would find the tools somewhere. On the whole, Canada had a good supply of machine tools and new ones were being turned out continuously.

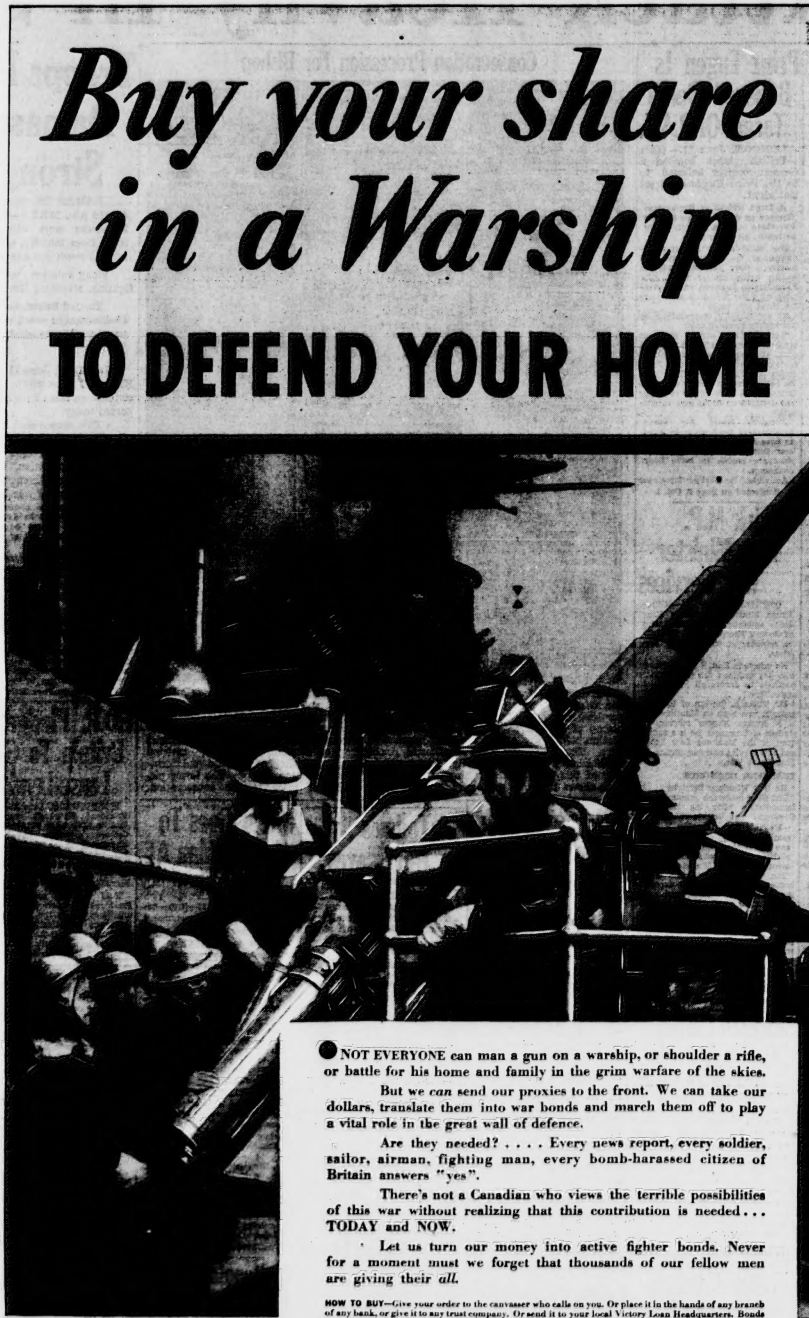

"In two months Canada won't have to buy a cutting tool outside the country," Mr. Arnold said. "There is no further need for worry there."

Will Deliver France

LONDON, June 11.—(CP)—Gen. Charles De Gaulle pledged yesterday his Free French forces will help fulfill the "will of France" by preventing an Axis victory, the British Broadcasting Corporation reported last night. "France does not want a German victory," he said in a speech at Cairo. "France wants to be delivered."

The German African Corps, poised on the western limits of Egypt, is known to have been heavily reinforced since its march across Libya was completed while the British army was busy in Greece. Nevertheless the strength the enemy can concentrate in North Africa is limited by the meagreness of its shipping resources and by the hazards of the Mediterranean crossing.

And attack on Alexandria or on the Suez Canal itself would be necessarily handicapped by the lack of supplementary flanking operations from the north and by the distance of air bases.

Turkey in the Picture

The whole situation, as it exists at present, tends to bring Turkey back into the international picture.

Turkey has been decidedly unhappy over the turn of recent events because, with Russia flirting with the Axis, she has feared herself to be surrounded by enemies since

Now, the presence of British forces along the whole length of Turkey's southern frontier in Asia will do much to bolster the Anglo-Turkish alliance and increase Turkey's confidence.

Turkish statesmen are aware that sooner or later a battle royal will be waged over the oil of Iraq. They are aware, too, that to protect Iraq from the Germans, Britain will have to increase her influence in Arabia and create a zone of influence in Iran.

This latter country, regarded as being in the sphere of Russia, may cause difficulties. Turkey would like to see Britain firmly established in these danger areas so as to preclude, as far as possible, any chance of Turkish territory being involved in the coming struggle.

Turkey, therefore, may manifest increasing friendliness towards Britain as Britain's influence is extended in these zones.

Tales Of The Sea
By J. S. COWPER

With all the high pressure salesmanship put behind the $800,000,000 Victory Loan, the Federal Government isn't overlooking the millions of dollars that American tourists leave behind them when on pleasure bent. The Bureau in charge of the National Parks is giving each visitor who comes a-fishing, a card on which he can record his piscatorial achievements. In addition to a space for the fisherman's name and address are spaces for recording the name of the lake or stream fished, the number of hours spent, and the lure and method used. The proud fisherman will be able to produce his card as Failures as well as triumphs are to be recorded for the limnological service of the Parks Administration. All of this should be an aid to truth, and a brake on the imagination when telling friends of the big ones that didn't get away.

Beating The Fog

For the last couple of weeks I've been living among deep sea fishermen, and listening to stories of hard luck, poor prices, balky engines, dilly fogs and occasional lawsuits with Fog doesn't bother the west coast fisherman as much as you'd think. Starting out at 2:30 a.m. for a three-hour run to the fishing grounds he keeps a "log". In it he writes down his courses, the length of time he runs on them, the drift of the tide, etc. If fog comes down on him he back-tracks on his fog courses, to find his way home in the murk. Many an amateur motor-yachtsman, accustomed to conning his way by head-lands, with short compass courses across the open sounds has been indebted to some grimy looking chap in a small trolley, for

Sharks are another matter. Big basking sharks that range from 40 to 80 feet in length are sluggish things that cause little trouble, but a wicked-looking gray shark of half that size and full of fight, rolls himself round and round in the net in search of freedom, and must be leaved when he has set his Whales, for all their size and strength—and I've seen them leap full fifty feet out of the water in a love chase in the mating season—never bother the fishermen. They seem to see or sense the presence of a net, and will back cautiously out of one if approached.

Among The Octopi

The octopus with its long vacuum-cupped tentacles and its baleful eyes set deep in its leathery-covered onion-shaped head, is the most fearsome-looking sea creature that free-quents our Pacific shores. Small wonder it is nicknamed the "devil-fish." Yet they are timid creatures, and not dangerous to a swimmer unless in shallow water when they can gain leverage by fastening a tentacle to a rock.

One of the drollest sights I ever saw in the social life of our sea denizens was in clear seawater off Read Island. Half a dozen hungry-looking grey cod were "worrying" a four-foot octopus. Like dogs in a pack they had it surrounded, rushing in to take a bite at the tip of a tentacle when the creature's eyes were turned from them. How it would have ended I do not know, for getting too near the group they all took fright and sped away.

From Australia comes a story of a 73-year-old native who, while diving in a creek to catch a turtle, was seized by the head in the jaws of a crocodile. The vital part of a crocodile is its eyes, just as the weak part of the octopus is its soft, onion-like head. The

AFTER bucking through difficulties that at first seemed insurmountable, the new Edmonton Junior Baseball League is ready for its opener at Renfrew Park on Sunday afternoon and may say that the executive is surprised and pleased with the public enthusiasm being shown for the "kid league" during its infancy.

This league, giving 70 or 80 youngsters a chance to play baseball and ensuring the future of the game here, is the first benefit of the city council vote from the appointment of the City Baseball Commission. Had it not been for the cooperation and assistance of the commission, it is doubtful if a junior circuit could have been organized.

Bill Morrison, veteran railroader and hall player, deserves a hearty slap on the back from every ball fan in the city—but his modesty will probably make him mighty hard to find for a few days.

When the Canadian Athletic Club found itself in dire straits to finance its hall team, Bill cleared up all its troubles so fast that the affair will rate as a full fledged miracle in Edmonton sport for years to come.

If Bill Morrison hadn't stepped in when he did with his imperishable grin and yen to help sport, things would have been pretty tough this season for Junior ball in Edmonton.

Bill used to pitch around Sudbury and Moose Jaw until he got his shoulder blade cracked in a football accident. Sportman and citizen, they don't come any better than Bill Morrison.

Golfers Wanted On Dotted Line

OFFICIALS in charge of the Edmonton amateur golf championship want your name on the entry list at your club house today or tomorrow afternoon, at the latest, if you plan on playing in the championship that starts Saturday at the Prince Rupert course. The draw will be made Thursday night and published in Friday's papers.

Officer Henry Martell of the city police force is again figured the man to beat for the Edmonton title. Don't be misled by the fact that he shot a 75 in the qualifying round at the Calgary Club championship last weekend. It was the best score in the club and Henry's golf is still red hot. It was the terrific wind blowing that day that wrecked all scores.

Next after the Edmonton amateur, comes the Alberta amateur championship. It will be played at the Calgary Club this year, starting on Thursday, July 10 and finishing on Sunday, July 13. Entries close at 5 p.m. on July 8.

Henry Martell has already won the Alberta amateur four times, in 1926, 1927, 1929 and 1930. Since the competition was started in 1903, only one other golfer has won this title four times. That shotmaker was J. Munro Hunter of Edmonton who took top honors in 1913, 1914, 1919 and 1920. The title journey was not held during the war years of 1915-1917.

Many of the old timers maintain that he played best held during those years. J. Munro Hunter would have his name engraved a couple time more on the trophy.

There will be a provincial junior championship again this year in connection with the provincial amateur. It will be 36 holes of medal play on July 13. If a junior wants he may enter the Alberta amateur and his 18-hole qualifying score will count as the first 18 holes of the junior championship.

Thisa and Thata Data

PLANS are still going steadily ahead for annual country district basketball championship in connection with the Edmonton Exhibition next month.

Down at Botha, the basketball fans are showing a lot of energy and enterprise in collecting enough money to make the trip to Edmonton for the tourney. They have a deal with Botha and its citizens to haul away their winter's accumulation of ash. Botha and brothers supplied the girls with some help. The ashes were made to serve a useful purpose by being placed on the cemetery roadway.

One was found that the British with the approval of everyone is the Relief Fund for British Fire Fighters, money for which is being raised for firemen throughout Canada and the United States. No front line soldier of the empire has shown more gallantry and devotion to duty under fire than those British firemen battling the flames and destruction here by Nazi bombs. Edmonton firemen are staging a softball game at Kinway Park on Saturday evening in aid of this fund and are arranging an inter-city game with Calgary firemen for the same objective.

The highlight of Tuesday's draw in the Civil Service Tennis Club was the great battle in the ladies' open doubles, put up by

Miss Holmgren had just previously played a 33 game match in the Four of the 12 draws went three sets before the winner was determined. Hogan being the first forced into the third set to defeat

Norbury, when the latter took the second 6-4 in the men's open.

In the ladies' open singles, D. Campbell won from C. Holmgren but the final set went 16 games.

The scores were 6-1, 4-6, 8-7. The Nelson-Richard combination beat the Campbell-McAvoy pair in the open doubles after dropping the first set, the three sets being 6-4, 6-7, 6-4.

In the mixed doubles McLeod won from the Davis-McAvoy pair by losing the second set. The scores were 6-0, 5-7, 6-4.

Eire Turns Down American Request

For Use Of Ports

LONDON, June 11.—(AP)—Ireland sources said today that Prime Minister Eamon de Valera of Eire had refused to permit the United States to use either airports or airports in Eire as a stepping stone for transportation of war supplies to Britain. The prime minister was said to feel that use of any part of Eire for such purposes would open the country to German air attacks as a legitimate military target.

It was understood, however, that it is agreeable to establishment of a terminus in Eire for trans-Atlantic passenger service.

The United States was said reliably to be speeding arrangements for a direct air link with Britain because of fear that German moves in the western Mediterranean and Atlantic soon might sweep the present collection via the Azores and Lisbon.

CHAPTER ONE

FOR a week the Allison home had been in an uproar. The two male members of the family, Carter Allison and George, his son, grumbled as they stumbled over rolled up papers and complained when they had to eat dinner in the breakfast room. But the women of the household ruthlessly brushed them aside as they superintended cleaning and renovation of the house, upstairs and down.

You shouldn't complain, Myra Allison said as her husband protested against standing at the kitchen sink to drink his morning orange juice and coffee while half a dozen colored servants, augmenting the regular staff, carried rugs and drapes to the back garden for a thorough dusting. "It isn't every day that your daughter gets married."

"For which we are duly thankful," growled George. "I don't see why Kay and Barry don't just hop in a car and go down to the rectory instead of all this mess and disorganization. Look at the expense."

"A lot you know about it," Wendy, aged 19, returned. "A wedding is the most important event in a girl's life. And you shouldn't talk about expense. I remember some of your bills at the university last year—that."

"Children!" Mrs. Allison admonished. "No quarreling now."

"Come on, George, let's get out of here," Carter Allison put down his coffee cup and gathered up his morning paper. "The office will be heaven compared to this. Thank the Lord it will be over in two more days and we'll have nothing to worry about but the cotton market."

Followed by his son, the elder Allison exited through the seemed thoroughly at peace was when Kay was close beside him. She didn't mention the note until she had parked the car downtown and they had disposed of the highly important matter of selecting the wedding ring.

"I had another note from your girl friend this morning," she said when they were in the car again and driving out to the Country Club for lunch.

Barry was at the wheel. She saw his jaw tighten, but he didn't say anything. When they had ordered their lunch, she took the note from her purse and handed it to him. It was a gray one, but he read it.

"I don't see it will help, go ahead!" Barry told her then how after he had found the rich gold loade he discovered it was going to take a lot of money to get the one out. Money was something he didn't have.

"I went to San Francisco looking for a baker and was introduced to Jettie," he continued. "As I told you before, she's immensely wealthy—the richest of the town. She encouraged me to talk, and first thing I knew she was making me a proposition. She offered to supply all the money for development, to build roads, put up buildings, sink shafts, everything you can think of. She wanted half the mine, which was reasonable.

Barry looked toward him, his face very serious as she looked into his eyes.

"Barry, there's no reason why you can't marry me. Honestly, I mean. 'None in the world, darling, and I'm going to marry you in spite of Jettie or anybody else if I have to kidnap you to do it.'"

A smile lighted up her face. "That's all I wanted to know," she said simply. During luncheon and the rest of the time they were together, Jettie wasn't mentioned.

At home Kay heard the house taking on a semblance of order and that kept out of this house until 8 o'clock anyway. We'll have a light supper then, just for the family, and after we'll all have to be ready for the wedding."

The Allison men meekly obeyed and didn't return until dinner was ready to be served.

Kay and her mother exulted themselves after the first course. Wendy and several of the feminine relatives followed. The business of getting the bride ready was in the hands of the maid of honor.

Barry had already been ready for the wedding.

Okay, Sir," Wendy, who was made of humor and gorgeous in pink chiffon, said. "Just as soon as we get the signal, we're set."

Kay glanced at the bride and the long mirror and took a firm grip on her chair. The party stepped from the room to wait in the entry for the signal to start down the aisle. The big doors ahead of them were closed.

pride and spite and span in his new uniform, drove Mr. Allison and the rest followed in other cars.

At the church, Kay was ushered into a small class room off the entrance to the chapel. The dressmaker was there to make last minute adjustments on the gown and veil. Carter Allison was there, too, nervously running a handkerchief between his collar and his neck.

face was becoming redder by the minute. Kay turned and walked slowly back to the class room, followed by Wendy and her bridesmaids. Marguerite, the little flower girl.

Once there, the bridesmaids started to chatter excitedly among themselves and to Kay.

What in the world can have happened? "Where do you suppose Barry is?" "Wonder if he had an accident?" were samples of their exclamations.

"I'm sure Kay doesn't know anything more about it than any of us," Wendy said, suddenly growing up and taking command of the situation.

Kay herself was standing alone by a stained glass window, nervously fingering her bouquet. Her face, a few minutes before so glowing with happiness and excitement, was now quite white. Her mouth was set in a straight line and there was a quiver in her chin not usually discernible.

RAGES INWARDLY. Inwardly she was raging against Jettie Dorne, and she seemed to see a mocking face laughing at her—a hideous face like that of an evil spirit.

"She's made good on her threats—on her boasts," she said to herself. "Somehow, she's kept Barry away from the church."

An usher opened the door, but the usher rubbed forward, halted at the expression on his face.

"Barry," he said. "We've postponed Barry's apartment, phone, garage, every place we can think of, after him."

saw Miss Kay step into the car, alone. "Why-why, where's the groom?" he finally managed to stammer.

"You'll learn all about this later, Captain," Wendy spoke up smartly. "Now, will you please take us home before Mother and Dad come."

"Vasquez," Cephus said, shutting the door of the car and running around to climb into the driver's seat. "As for you!"

Wendy sat in the front downstairs, where she had changed from her wedding dress to a simple dark silk suit. She found the whole family, including the out-of-town relatives, gathered in the drawing room, in excited conversation.

She was about to slip through the hallway and into the front door when George spotted her, and let out a yell.

"Hey, Kay! Where you going?" he demanded.

kitchen door and a moment later the motor of a big car purred softly as they abandoned the scene of confusion and headed downtown to the building that housed the offices of Allison and Son, Cotton Factors.

"Now, maybe we can get something done," Mrs. Allison remarked. "Where's Kay?"

"Upstairs in the room, I think. A messenger just brought a note—probably another love letter from Barry," Wendy sighed as she looked into space with dreamy eyes. "I only hope when I get married I'll find a man like Barry Flynn."

PUZZLED FROWN. Kay was in her room, a puzzled frown on her face as she re-read the note which had arrived by special delivery mail.

"You think you'll be Barry's wife in two more days," the note read, "but you're due for the shock of your life. Barry won't be at the wedding. Don't say I didn't warn you."

Her forehead still creased by the frown, Kay folded the note and put it on her dressing table. She'd show it to Barry when she met him downtown.

As she smoothed her reddish brown hair which she wore in a long bob, she stared at her reflection in the mirror.

"Jettie Dorne," the note had been signed, as had the three others she had received in the last three days.

"A strange woman," she mused. "She's got the idea her notes are going to frighten me. I wonder, though..."

She didn't complete the thought as she got her purse from the dresser, slipped the note into it and started downstairs. In the hallway she took a final glimpse of herself in the full length mirror and was satisfied with what she saw.

The face that returned her glance was an interesting one, full of vitality and charm. Her wide blue-green eyes, sparkling with intelligence were set in an oval face, rounded by a firm chin that gave a hint of a decisive nature and a stubbornness.

PERFECT ENSEMBLE. Her knee white blouse and white skirt made a perfect ensemble for a young girl. She pulled the large rough straw hat a little farther back on her head.

ATTRACTED FROM FIRST. In the drawing room she was attracted from first by the waiting of the drink hand, about two girls.

"Thirty-six for you," Wendy commented. "Popping off downtown while Mother and I work our fingers to the bone."

"Hush, Wendy," Mrs. Allison interrupted. "You know Kay has to see Barry downtown. He'll be doing this All for you someday soon."

"I'll get into my own clothes when I get home and help you up," Kay promised. "We'll just get picked out the ring today so I can be engaged in time. And I've got a million odds and ends of dresses to do, too."

"I was only kidding," the younger sister said, pushing back a vagrant blonde curl that had escaped from the lines, waved behind her head. "Take all the time you want after tomorrow. We'll just get picked out the ring today so I can be engaged in time. And I've got a million odds and ends of dresses to do, too."

"You're a sweet kid," Kay kissed the girl's cheek, and hurried to the rear parlor, where she found the maid smiling at her and waiting to return.

"You were happy," she said. "She's! Wait! She's going to marry tomorrow, wealthy Barry Flynn, who's so handsome! But that he's had anything to do with it. She had already considered the possibility of her romance with Barry, who two months ago had suddenly appeared in Memphis."

Kay remembered that the first time she had seen him was in a crowd, where he was being escorted by a man who had been a member of the military. She was so

Kay looked toward him, his face very serious as she looked into his eyes.

Barry, there's no reason why you can't marry me. Honestly, I mean. 'None in the world, darling, and I'm going to marry you in spite of Jettie or anybody else if I have to kidnap you to do it.'

A smile lighted up her face. "That's all I wanted to know," she said simply. During luncheon and the rest of the time they were together, Jettie wasn't mentioned.

At home Kay heard the house taking on a semblance of order and that kept out of this house until 8 o'clock anyway. We'll have a light supper then, just for the family, and after we'll all have to be ready for the wedding."

The Allison men meekly obeyed and didn't return until dinner was ready to be served.

Kay and her mother exulted themselves after the first course. Wendy and several of the feminine relatives followed. The business of getting the bride ready was in the hands of the maid of honor.

Barry had already been ready for the wedding.

Okay, Sir," Wendy, who was made of humor and gorgeous in pink chiffon, said. "Just as soon as we get the signal, we're set."

Kay glanced at the bride and the long mirror and took a firm grip on her chair. The party stepped from the room to wait in the entry for the signal to start down the aisle. The big doors ahead of them were closed.

Memorably, "Wedding March" swelled triumphantly from the organ. The bride looked nervously around and started all over again. "What the dickens is wrong?" Wendy whispered to one of the bridesmaids.

For the second time the march was finished.

At the church, Kay was ushered into a small class room off the entrance to the chapel. The dressmaker was there to make last minute adjustments on the gown and veil. Carter Allison was there, too, nervously running a handkerchief between his collar and his neck.

CHAPTER THIRTY-SIX
It was raining hard at the hospital where Miss Van was spending her second week. Many cars drove up to the entrance to deposit flower baskets and relatives but none were gossamer than that driven by the liveried chauffeur belonging to Mrs. Dudley Mantion.

When he opened the door for her he asked, "Shall I carry these inside for you, Madam?"
Daphne shook her head.
"No, thank you, Sonoma. They aren't heavy. I can carry them myself." She was smiling as he returned to the car. It was proof of Daphne's charm that even her valet admired her. Daphne was thinking, "Sonoma is such a nice name for a chauffeur. It sounds so English."

At peace with herself and the world, she found her former landlady sitting up in bed wearing dainty blue bed-jacket Daphne herself had given her.

MISS VAN SMILES
"So grand I am," Miss Van said smiling. "Never in my life have I had anything so pretty."
"I brought you some flowers to-day," Daphne said smiling. "And I've a message for you from one of your greatest admirers."

"You mean your husband?" Miss Van inquired flushing. "He will never forget that I loved him as you together again. But what I did was nothing."

"You gave me the best advice a girl ever had," Daphne reminded her when you told me not to accept any financial settlement. Dudley still thinks that to be my own life, and I hope you will never disillusion him."

Miss Van smiled.
"Isn't this a lovely boy of candy?" John and Sybil brought it to me. But the message, child, you have not told me that yet."

Daphne sat down and began to nibble a bon bon from the gold and white box.
"I may as well warn you that he won't take no for an answer. You know how Dudley is when he makes up his mind."

"But what is it?" Miss Van asked, bewildered.

NEEDS REST
"Dudley has talked to your doctor, who thinks you ought to have at least a month of complete rest after leaving the hospital. So we've decided to bring you to our home and play down the sober baby."

Animal Crackers

When the ceremony was finished and Lee Brent took his bride in the arms, the other two couples were looking at each other with such sympathetic devotion that there were no witnesses to their kiss except the minister and Miss Van.

"I had given Miss Van the greatest happiness she had ever known to see the three girls she loved actually married. Daphne's husband, she considered marriage the most priceless boon life could offer."

And next best to experiencing matrimony was the joy of offering her loving service to those motherless girls. So proud she was of them, so pleased with the maturity and grace they were acquiring that she had little time to worry about Joan.

STEEL AND IRON ARE NOT THE SAME THING

It is a common thing for people to speak of iron and steel as though they were the same thing, but they are not. Iron is a single chemical substance; while steel is a compound of two or more chemical materials. Steel is a combination of iron and carbon. The percentage of carbon present determines the kind of steel. Two-thirds of a per cent of carbon produces soft steel similar to wrought iron. Hard steel contains from one-third of a per cent to 1.5 per cent of carbon. Cast iron is really steel, with a percentage of carbon above 1.5 per cent.

Rain Is Badly Needed To Aid Season's Crop

Rain is needed in the Edmonton district in making crop growth and to provide sufficient moisture to sow remaining coarse grain, according to the third annual provincial government crop survey, for the first time released Wednesday by Hon. D. Bruce MacMillan, minister of agriculture.

The report states that there are two distinct districts in Alberta at this time, according to crop conditions.

South of a line drawn across the province from Medicine Hat to Wainwright, general conditions are good, but north of this line, rain is badly needed to maintain growth of crops and to provide sufficient moisture to sow the remaining coarse grain.

RAIN IN SOUTH

The Peace River district is generally good, but additional rain is needed here to provide sufficient moisture that has disappeared rapidly through high winds and dry weather, states the report.

In the southern part of the province, many districts report from one to more than two inches of rain. This precipitation has revived both crops and pastures. Wind damaged crops are recovering rapidly but some wheat and summer fallow is held up in some localities allowing the weeds to gain the upper hand.

The dry action of the province states the report, need rain badly. Crops are generally patchy and farmers are waiting available moisture conditions before completing the seeding of coarse grains. Pastures are very bad, although tame pastures are holding up much better than the native grass.

There has been little or no damage. Livestock are making much faster growth and putting on flesh in the south as pasture conditions improve. Grass fattened cattle in some areas will be ready for market soon. Wheat production is reported to be the highest in many years. The winter rain has improved pastures and poultry are making satisfactory progress.

In the dry section, the condition of livestock is only fair, because pastures are not providing sufficient feed. In some areas, especially close to Edmonton, farmers have had to turn livestock into

Police Look For Man Who Took A Spin

City police are investigating the disappearance of Morton Motors, 101 St. Albert, who took a 1938 Hudson sedan for a trial spin at 2:45 p.m. Tuesday and has not yet returned.

A man, who gave his name as Greg Wright, expressed an interest in a used car, bearing Alberta No. 841302. This obliging salesman who served with the military was only too glad to permit Mr. Wright to take the car for a trial spin.

Mr. Wright hadn't returned from the spin Wednesday morning.

1,500 Expected Summer School

More than 1,500 teachers are expected to attend the annual summer school of the provincial education department and University of Alberta which opens on July 2 and continues until August 6. Officials stated Tuesday. Three centres will be required to carry on the schooling. The centres are the University of Alberta, the University of Alberta Technical school and the University of Alberta.

As a rule, the entire joint summer session is held at the University. On account of the transfer of the three University residence buildings to the Dominion government, it is in connection with the Empire Art Training plan, it has been necessary to make the change.

Arrangements were in progress Wednesday for visiting the normal school, which is also being turned over to the Dominion in connection with the plan. Work is being continued at the University of Alberta, which is being packed for movement to and storage in other school buildings.

their hay crops as pastures would not sustain them. In the area west of Edmonton, a light hay crop is now anticipated.

There has been a report that the hay crop is being making largely because of more milking cows and better feeding practices. Good rains to improve pastures would increase milk yield rapidly. Hay quality conditions are satisfactory.

There have been no reports of damage to crops, but cattlemen have had to turn livestock into Medical report was submitted by Medical Inspector G. E. Swallow, M.D., showing that 1,280 medical and 47 complete examinations were made during May. He stated that the examinations for the term were completed and that pre-school examinations are now underway and will continue during June and July.

ATTENDANCE DOWN

Superintendent Sheppard reported that an average of 474 in the amount of $1,407.50 had been paid by children in city schools up to the present time, and that the distribution was fairly even throughout the schools.

A decrease of 474 in students attending school in May as compared with the same month last year is reported.

MEDICAL REQUEST

A delegation of parents of school children in the McMurrough school area attended the morning and asked that a class for Grade 8 students be re-opened in the school.

The fact that the only room available was a basement one which had previously been used for Grade 8 students, and which had been closed at the request of the parents, was pointed out.

On motion of Trustee E. Gunderson, the request of the parents of Sup. Sheppard that no Grade 8 school, and the Riverside school, to give Grade 8 and that as a general policy, Roman Catholic pupils applying for admission in our schools be directed to Roman Catholic schools if possible, was approved.

Chairman A. E. Ottewill pointed out that the regulation was subject to the discretion of the superintendent in case of hardship to students, and that the recommendation had been based on an agreement with A. A. O'Brien, superintendent of the Roman Catholic separate schools.
